

Convening partners to help solve problems; sharing her insights of the issues and ideas for addressing them; I encourage the executive director of TRPA to continue to connect with peer agencies in smaller settings than TIE to really understand each other's priorities and pressures; Supporting and empowering her team and engaging with the broader conservation community to bring outside solutions to Tahoe,

What is one thing you would like to see TRPA's Executive Director stop doing?

Ignoring the current hostile environment in the Basin; Pause in creation of new plans until we can collectively make progress on current plans and objectives.

Looking forward to the next one to two years, what one idea or suggestion would you make to TRPA's Executive Director?

Step up into a true leadership role and address the growing group of anti-development folks. The TRPA's reputation is in need of repair right now. It won't happen overnight, but it's critical to the health of the Basin to shift this dynamic; make meaningful progress around Destination Stewardship and finding the right balance between ecological health and human occupation and development of the Lake Tahoe Basin; leverage the wealth in the Tahoe Basin to address the needs of the Basin and not depend so heavily on government funding, which is always an uncertainty; The extremes of climate change are having a much greater and acute impact on the Basin than previously imagined. I think there is value in TRPA's executive director bringing together managing agencies to have a conversation about taking a more holistic view around land management needs and concerns when it comes to administrative actions like permitting. Similarly, I think TRPA can help initiate a conversation and coordinate among managing agencies about how to best protect our communities from the impacts of extreme climate events and agencies roles in mitigating those; Shift resources and attention to ensuring implementation of mitigation measures and assessment of benchmark and regional goals.
